In 1978, Ntshinga was arrested and imprisoned by the apartheid government. He was tortured and held in solitary confinement for months. Despite the horrific conditions, Ntshinga continued to write poetry. His poems expressed his pain and anger, but they also celebrated the human spirit and the hope for a better future.

Ntshinga was eventually released from prison, but he continued to be harassed and threatened by the apartheid government. He eventually went into exile in the United States, where he continued to write poetry and speak out against apartheid.

Ntshinga's poetry has been praised by critics for its power and beauty. He has been compared to other great poets who have written about the human condition, such as Pablo Neruda and Maya Angelou.

Poet Under Apartheid is a heartbreaking and unforgettable true story about the power of words and the human spirit. It is a must-read for anyone who wants to understand the horrors of apartheid and the struggle for freedom.
