Prior to Norman's victory, golf was dominated by American players. In fact, no non-American had won the Masters since 1934. Norman's victory broke that streak and opened the door for other international players to compete for golf's most prestigious tournaments.

Norman's victory was also significant because of the way he won. Norman shot a final-round 64 to win by five strokes, the largest margin of victory in Masters history. His performance was so dominant that it left no doubt that he was the best golfer in the world.

Norman's victory had a profound impact on the game of golf. It helped to popularize the game around the world and it inspired a new generation of golfers. Norman's victory also helped to change the way golf was played. Prior to Norman's victory, golfers were known for their conservative style of play. Norman, however, was not afraid to take risks and he often hit the ball long and hard.

Norman's style of play was quickly adopted by other golfers and it soon became the norm. Today, golfers are more aggressive and they are not afraid to hit the ball long and hard. This has led to a more exciting and entertaining game of golf.

Norman's victory at the Masters was a watershed moment in the history of golf. It marked the beginning of a new era in golf and it helped to popularize the game around the world. Norman's victory also helped to change the way golf was played and it inspired a new generation of golfers.
