What is the Mandela Effect?

The Mandela Effect was first named in 2009 by paranormal researcher Fiona Broome. Broome coined the term after she discovered that she shared a false memory with many other people: the belief that Nelson Mandela died in a South African prison in the 1980s. In reality, Mandela was released from prison in 1990 and died in 2013.

Since Broomes discovery, hundreds of other Mandela Effects have been identified. Some of the most common include:

- The belief that the Monopoly Man has a monocle
- The belief that the Berenstain Bears are spelled "Berenstein Bears"
- The belief that there was a movie called "Shazaam" starring Sinbad
- The belief that the United States has 52 states
- The belief that the Statue of Liberty is holding a torch in her left hand

What Causes the Mandela Effect?

There are many different theories about what causes the Mandela Effect. Some researchers believe that it is a result of a glitch in the matrix. Others believe that it is a symptom of mass hypnosis. Still others believe that it is a sign of parallel universes.

There is no scientific evidence to support any of these theories. However, the Mandela Effect is a fascinating phenomenon that has captured the attention of people all over the world. This book provides a quick reference guide to the most common Mandela Effects, as well as theories about what might be causing them.
