In his book Why Did You Buy This Book?, A.J. Jacobs explores the reasons why people buy books. He talks to booksellers, publishers, and readers from all walks of life to try to understand what motivates us to buy books.

Jacobs discovers that there are many different reasons why people buy books. Some people buy books to learn new things. Others buy books to escape from reality. Still others buy books to be entertained. And some people buy books simply because they love the feel of a book in their hands.

No matter what your reason for buying books, Jacobs argues that it is a good thing. Books can help us learn new things, expand our horizons, and make us more empathetic. They can also provide us with much-needed entertainment and relaxation.

So, why did you buy this book? Whatever your reason, I hope you find it enjoyable and thought-provoking.
